Man Arrested at Huntington Said to be From Lewis County

In the case of John McElroy and the woman who claims to be his wife, held at Huntington, W. Va., for alleged green goods swindle, Inspector Horton is now in Kentucky to investigate and will visit the addresses of persons given in the letters that have been found since the arrests.

McElroy claims to be from Vanceburg. He says that the woman arrested with him is not his wife and that he ran across her after arriving in Huntington about six months ago.

A dispatch from Manchester says his home is in Trinity and also that he was indicted some years ago by the Lewis County Circuit Court for horse-stealing, but was acquitted.

MISTOOK THE NAME

Maysville Has a Manchester That's on the Earth Just Now

An episode occurred yesterday afternoon that was comical if not ludicrous.

One of Colonel John C. Lovell's rural Ohio friends brought to this side of the river a coop of turkeys and needing a drayman to transport them to their destination asked the urbane gentleman if he could secure one.

"Certainly," responded the handsome and genial man of the house, and calling Tug Wilson, he introduced him to the man from Ohio, where the following colloquy took place:

"I want you to haul a coop of turkeys to Manchester," said the man from the other side of the water.

"The hell you do," retorted Tug, "are you aware that Manchester is twelve miles from here, and that I am not running an automobile line? No sir, I don't want the job."

"But, my friend," placidly replied the turkey man, "your trolly is evidently off its wire. I do not mean Manchester, O., but Manchester at the Produce House in Third street."

It was by chance that Colonel Lovell caught Tug, else he would have fallen off his dray and broken his neck,—his coming to life was as sudden.

It did not require an entire box of Doan's Kidney Pills to entirely end backache which had troubled me for a considerable length of time. I procured the remedy at J. Jas. Wood obtained."
